WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
	RATE	APR	Housing affordability remains under pressure despite recent declines in home prices. Although prices have softened slightly, elevated mortgage rates and rising ownership costs - including insurance, taxes and maintenance - continue to make homeownership unaffordable for many families. The Atlanta Fed reports that owning a median-priced home now consumes 53% of median household income, the highest on record. Construction spending continues to moderate under high financing costs. Single-family outlays have taken a decided turn lower alongside elevated new home inventory, high mortgage rates and pronounced economic uncertainty. Residential construction activity tumbled 0.7% in June. As widely expected, the FOMC left the fed funds rate unchanged at the conclusion of its meeting last week. The committee has now held the policy rate steady at 4.25%-4.50% for five consecutive meetings. A cut at the FOMC's next meeting in September is still up in the air, and upcoming economic data will be critical in determining the future path of monetary policy. ## WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
	RATE	APR	Housing affordability remains under pressure despite recent declines in home prices. Although prices have softened slightly, elevated mortgage rates and rising ownership costs - including insurance, taxes and maintenance - continue to make homeownership unaffordable for many families. The Atlanta Fed reports that owning a median-priced home now consumes 53% of median household income, the highest on record. Construction spending continues to moderate under high financing costs. Single-family outlays have taken a decided turn lower alongside elevated new home inventory, high mortgage rates and pronounced economic uncertainty. Residential construction activity tumbled 0.7% in June. As widely expected, the FOMC left the fed funds rate unchanged at the conclusion of its meeting last week. The committee has now held the policy rate steady at 4.25%-4.50% for five consecutive meetings. A cut at the FOMC's next meeting in September is still up in the air, and upcoming economic data will be critical in determining the future path of monetary policy. ## WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
	RATE	APR	Housing affordability remains under pressure despite recent declines in home prices. Although prices have softened slightly, elevated mortgage rates and rising ownership costs - including insurance, taxes and maintenance - continue to make homeownership unaffordable for many families. The Atlanta Fed reports that owning a median-priced home now consumes 53% of median household income, the highest on record. Construction spending continues to moderate under high financing costs. Single-family outlays have taken a decided turn lower alongside elevated new home inventory, high mortgage rates and pronounced economic uncertainty. Residential construction activity tumbled 0.7% in June. As widely expected, the FOMC left the fed funds rate unchanged at the conclusion of its meeting last week. The committee has now held the policy rate steady at 4.25%-4.50% for five consecutive meetings. A cut at the FOMC's next meeting in September is still up in the air, and upcoming economic data will be critical in determining the future path of monetary policy.
