WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
	RATE	APR	No matter how resilient the broader economy appears, cracks are still materializing across interest-rate sensitive sectors. The housing market is clearly caught in the crossfire. Both new and existing home sales softened in June. Elevated rate expectations amid the Fed's ongoing fight against inflation have kept mortgage rates close to 7.0% for most of the year, discouraging would-be buyers. Demand for new construction appears to be losing steam. New home sales slipped 0.6% in June. That said, this print was weaker than expected and brought the pace of new home sales to its lowest point since last November. Despite increased use of incentives, builders report that buyer traffic has waned as expectations for lower rates later this year keep buyers in wait-and-see mode. Developers have pulled back on single-family building in response, mirroring dips in buyer traffic and builder confidence. Plentiful new home inventories are also discouraging development. The count of new homes for sale rose for the third consecutive month in June, amounting to 9.3 months' supply at the current sales pace. WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
	RATE	APR	No matter how resilient the broader economy appears, cracks are still materializing across interest-rate sensitive sectors. The housing market is clearly caught in the crossfire. Both new and existing home sales softened in June. Elevated rate expectations amid the Fed's ongoing fight against inflation have kept mortgage rates close to 7.0% for most of the year, discouraging would-be buyers. Demand for new construction appears to be losing steam. New home sales slipped 0.6% in June. That said, this print was weaker than expected and brought the pace of new home sales to its lowest point since last November. Despite increased use of incentives, builders report that buyer traffic has waned as expectations for lower rates later this year keep buyers in wait-and-see mode. Developers have pulled back on single-family building in response, mirroring dips in buyer traffic and builder confidence. Plentiful new home inventories are also discouraging development. The count of new homes for sale rose for the third consecutive month in June, amounting to 9.3 months' supply at the current sales pace. WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
	RATE	APR	No matter how resilient the broader economy appears, cracks are still materializing across interest-rate sensitive sectors. The housing market is clearly caught in the crossfire. Both new and existing home sales softened in June. Elevated rate expectations amid the Fed's ongoing fight against inflation have kept mortgage rates close to 7.0% for most of the year, discouraging would-be buyers. Demand for new construction appears to be losing steam. New home sales slipped 0.6% in June. That said, this print was weaker than expected and brought the pace of new home sales to its lowest point since last November. Despite increased use of incentives, builders report that buyer traffic has waned as expectations for lower rates later this year keep buyers in wait-and-see mode. Developers have pulled back on single-family building in response, mirroring dips in buyer traffic and builder confidence. Plentiful new home inventories are also discouraging development. The count of new homes for sale rose for the third consecutive month in June, amounting to 9.3 months' supply at the current sales pace.
