WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE	APR	The seasonally adjusted January housing starts numbers will likely show a decline, but only because the December numbers were boosted by unusually warm weather. One of the warmest Decembers on record saw non-seasonally adjusted starts actually rise 3.2%- activity typically falls sharply during winter months- which translated into a 16.9% seasonally adjusted surge to a 1.61 million- unit pace, the highest since December 2006. While weather boosted the level of starts above its trend, that trend is undeniably strong. We expect continued gains, supported by elevated builder optimism, rising price appreciation, and solid consumer fundamentals. What's more, last month was the fifth warmest January on record, meaning the seasonal adjustment may shoot the number above trend again. The January jobs report already showed this effect, with construction employment reportedly surging by 44,000 jobs. The Fed left rates on hold in January as was widely expected, but markets now expect a cut before the end of the year. With the Fed making it clear that it needs to see a "material" change to the outlook, we continue to think it will remain on the sidelines. However, the minutes will provide greater clarity on just how close committee members view various factors-the coronavirus' effect on domestic growth and persistent below-target inflation, for example-come to being "material." ## WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE 3.41%	APR 3.50%	The seasonally adjusted January housing starts numbers will likely show a decline, but only because the December numbers were boosted by unusually warm weather. One of the warmest Decembers on record saw non-seasonally adjusted starts actually rise 3.2%- activity typically falls sharply during winter months- which translated into a 16.9% seasonally adjusted surge to a 1.61 million- unit pace, the highest since December 2006. While weather boosted the level of starts above its trend, that trend is undeniably strong. We expect continued gains, supported by elevated builder optimism, rising price appreciation, and solid consumer fundamentals. What's more, last month was the fifth warmest January on record, meaning the seasonal adjustment may shoot the number above trend again. The January jobs report already showed this effect, with construction employment reportedly surging by 44,000 jobs. The Fed left rates on hold in January as was widely expected, but markets now expect a cut before the end of the year. With the Fed making it clear that it needs to see a "material" change to the outlook, we continue to think it will remain on the sidelines. However, the minutes will provide greater clarity on just how close committee members view various factors-the coronavirus' effect on domestic growth and persistent below-target inflation, for example-come to being "material." ## WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE	APR	The seasonally adjusted January housing starts numbers will likely show a decline, but only because the December numbers were boosted by unusually warm weather. One of the warmest Decembers on record saw non-seasonally adjusted starts actually rise 3.2%- activity typically falls sharply during winter months- which translated into a 16.9% seasonally adjusted surge to a 1.61 million- unit pace, the highest since December 2006. While weather boosted the level of starts above its trend, that trend is undeniably strong. We expect continued gains, supported by elevated builder optimism, rising price appreciation, and solid consumer fundamentals. What's more, last month was the fifth warmest January on record, meaning the seasonal adjustment may shoot the number above trend again. The January jobs report already showed this effect, with construction employment reportedly surging by 44,000 jobs. The Fed left rates on hold in January as was widely expected, but markets now expect a cut before the end of the year. With the Fed making it clear that it needs to see a "material" change to the outlook, we continue to think it will remain on the sidelines. However, the minutes will provide greater clarity on just how close committee members view various factors-the coronavirus' effect on domestic growth and persistent below-target inflation, for example-come to being "material."
