NATIONAL BUILDER DIVISION

WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV			Weakness extended to the housing market, which is clearly in recession. Total housing starts fell another 4.2% in October, bringing the annualized level to 1.425 million units. The fall in housing starts continues to be concentrated in the single-family sector where starts fell to the lowest rate since May 2020. Forward-looking building permits suggest little relief is in sight, with single-family permits also dropping to the lowest level since the early months of the pandemic. Moreover, the NAHB Housing Market Index fell for the 11th straight month, dropping to its lowest level since April 2020. The current sales, future sales and traffic of prospective buyers' components all decreased and are running at very low levels, which highlights the degree of homebuyer retreat the market is now seeing. Having declined eight of the past 10 months, the Leading Economic Index (LEI) reminds us choppy waters are likely ahead for the U.S. economy in 2023. WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

CONV	RATE	APR
	7.25%	7.28%	Weakness extended to the housing market, which is clearly in recession. Total housing starts fell another 4.2% in October, bringing the annualized level to 1.425 million units. The fall in housing starts continues to be concentrated in the single-family sector where starts fell to the lowest rate since May 2020. Forward-looking building permits suggest little relief is in sight, with single-family permits also dropping to the lowest level since the early months of the pandemic. Moreover, the NAHB Housing Market Index fell for the 11th straight month, dropping to its lowest level since April 2020. The current sales, future sales and traffic of prospective buyers' components all decreased and are running at very low levels, which highlights the degree of homebuyer retreat the market is now seeing. Having declined eight of the past 10 months, the Leading Economic Index (LEI) reminds us choppy waters are likely ahead for the U.S. economy in 2023. 		Weakness extended to the housing market, which is clearly in recession. Total housing starts fell another 4.2% in October, bringing the annualized level to 1.425 million units. The fall in housing starts continues to be concentrated in the single-family sector where starts fell to the lowest rate since May 2020. Forward-looking building permits suggest little relief is in sight, with single-family permits also dropping to the lowest level since the early months of the pandemic. Moreover, the NAHB Housing Market Index fell for the 11th straight month, dropping to its lowest level since April 2020. The current sales, future sales and traffic of prospective buyers' components all decreased and are running at very low levels, which highlights the degree of homebuyer retreat the market is now seeing. Having declined eight of the past 10 months, the Leading Economic Index (LEI) reminds us choppy waters are likely ahead for the U.S. economy in 2023.
