In the United States, home builders get started on about 1.3 million new homes a year. That is the average annualized pace over the past 10 years at least. The bottom briefly fell out during the pandemic, but over the next few years, only soaring lumber prices and difficulty finding tradespeople to do the work stood in the way as the pace of construction soared to north of 1.8 million at its peak in early 2022. It is no coincidence early 2022 also marks the start of the current Fed tightening cycle and that homebuilding has been in a trend decline since. There have been a few saving graces for builders during this difficult period. One of those is the scant inventory of available homes as would-be sellers of existing homes refuse to budge lest they lose their low-interest mortgage. Another is the fact that some of those homeowners have opted to put on an addition or remodel their existing home. That is not enough work to offset slower pace of housing starts, but it helps at least at the margin. We look for housing starts to come in at 1.315K in June. Sustained higher mortgage rates, a lack of buildable lots and chronic labor shortages continue to weigh on home builders' view about the outlook as evidenced by the second straight drop in the NAHB Housing Market Index in June. WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE 6.50%	APR 6.59%	In the United States, home builders get started on about 1.3 million new homes a year. That is the average annualized pace over the past 10 years at least. The bottom briefly fell out during the pandemic, but over the next few years, only soaring lumber prices and difficulty finding tradespeople to do the work stood in the way as the pace of construction soared to north of 1.8 million at its peak in early 2022. It is no coincidence early 2022 also marks the start of the current Fed tightening cycle and that homebuilding has been in a trend decline since. There have been a few saving graces for builders during this difficult period. One of those is the scant inventory of available homes as would-be sellers of existing homes refuse to budge lest they lose their low-interest mortgage. Another is the fact that some of those homeowners have opted to put on an addition or remodel their existing home. That is not enough work to offset slower pace of housing starts, but it helps at least at the margin. We look for housing starts to come in at 1.315K in June. Sustained higher mortgage rates, a lack of buildable lots and chronic labor shortages continue to weigh on home builders' view about the outlook as evidenced by the second straight drop in the NAHB Housing Market Index in June. WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing		Market Commentary
CONV		In the United States, home builders get started on about 1.3 million new homes a year. That is the average annualized pace over the past 10 years at least. The bottom briefly fell out during the pandemic, but over the next few years, only soaring lumber prices and difficulty finding tradespeople to do the work stood in the way as the pace of construction soared to north of 1.8 million at its peak in early 2022. It is no coincidence early 2022 also marks the start of the current Fed tightening cycle and that homebuilding has been in a trend decline since. There have been a few saving graces for builders during this difficult period. One of those is the scant inventory of available homes as would-be sellers of existing homes refuse to budge lest they lose their low-interest mortgage. Another is the fact that some of those homeowners have opted to put on an addition or remodel their existing home. That is not enough work to offset slower pace of housing starts, but it helps at least at the margin. We look for housing starts to come in at 1.315K in June. Sustained higher mortgage rates, a lack of buildable lots and chronic labor shortages continue to weigh on home builders' view about the outlook as evidenced by the second straight drop in the NAHB Housing Market Index in June.
