WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE 5.99%	APR 6.06%	Traditionally, new home sales represent about 10% of home sales, but new home sales currently have an outsized impact on the total housing market. The U.S. Census Bureau reported that July's new home sales rose again, coming in at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 739,000. That is up 10.6% from June and up 5.6% year over year. Existing home sales, reported by the National Association of Realtors, tell a different story, with sales up just 1.3% month over month and down 2.5% year over year. Real estate watchers should note that new single-family home sales vary greatly from month to month, and preliminary figures can be sharply revised. Still, new homes are more popular right now. When it comes to inventory, homebuyers are dependent on sellers putting homes up for sale. According to data from the Federal Housing Finance Agency, around 86% of mortgages in the U.S. have an interest rate below 6%, with the average interest rate on existing mortgages at 4.1%. That's a powerful incentive for potential home sellers to stay put. Mortgage rate changes don't tend to prompt a major flood of home inventory. While existing home inventory has risen to a four-month supply, that's a national number that doesn't reflect individual markets. In some markets, inventory is abundant; others, it is still a trickle. According to the latest report, new home inventory is at a 7.5-month supply, indicating a market that favors the buyer. For the last several years, new home construction has represented a third of all inventory, above historical norms. Homebuilders can also build where people are moving, and they have flexibility in putting homes up for sale. Source: Yahoo Finance Deidre Woillard

			Traditionally, new home sales represent about 10% of home sales, but new home sales currently have an outsized impact on the total housing market. The U.S. Census Bureau reported that July's new home sales rose again, coming in at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 739,000. That is up 10.6% from June and up 5.6% year over year. Existing home sales, reported by the National Association of Realtors, tell a different story, with sales up just 1.3% month over month and down 2.5% year over year. Real estate watchers should note that new single-family home sales vary greatly from month to month, and preliminary figures can be sharply revised. Still, new homes are more popular right now. When it comes to inventory, homebuyers are dependent on sellers putting homes up for sale. According to data from the Federal Housing Finance Agency, around 86% of mortgages in the U.S. have an interest rate below 6%, with the average interest rate on existing mortgages at 4.1%. That's a powerful incentive for potential home sellers to stay put. Mortgage rate changes don't tend to prompt a major flood of home inventory. While existing home inventory has risen to a four-month supply, that's a national number that doesn't reflect individual markets. In some markets, inventory is abundant; others, it is still a trickle. According to the latest report, new home inventory is at a 7.5-month supply, indicating a market that favors the buyer. For the last several years, new home construction has represented a third of all inventory, above historical norms. Homebuilders can also build where people are moving, and they have flexibility in putting homes up for sale. Source: Yahoo Finance Deidre Woillard

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE	APR	Traditionally, new home sales represent about 10% of home sales, but new home sales currently have an outsized impact on the total housing market. The U.S. Census Bureau reported that July's new home sales rose again, coming in at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 739,000. That is up 10.6% from June and up 5.6% year over year. Existing home sales, reported by the National Association of Realtors, tell a different story, with sales up just 1.3% month over month and down 2.5% year over year. Real estate watchers should note that new single-family home sales vary greatly from month to month, and preliminary figures can be sharply revised. Still, new homes are more popular right now. When it comes to inventory, homebuyers are dependent on sellers putting homes up for sale. According to data from the Federal Housing Finance Agency, around 86% of mortgages in the U.S. have an interest rate below 6%, with the average interest rate on existing mortgages at 4.1%. That's a powerful incentive for potential home sellers to stay put. Mortgage rate changes don't tend to prompt a major flood of home inventory. While existing home inventory has risen to a four-month supply, that's a national number that doesn't reflect individual markets. In some markets, inventory is abundant; others, it is still a trickle. According to the latest report, new home inventory is at a 7.5-month supply, indicating a market that favors the buyer. For the last several years, new home construction has represented a third of all inventory, above historical norms. Homebuilders can also build where people are moving, and they have flexibility in putting homes up for sale. Source: Yahoo Finance Deidre Woillard
