WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE 6.38%	APR 6.86%
FHA	5.99%	6.96%
10 Yr Yield	4.40%		Rebounding from an 11.5% adverse weather-driven decline in January, total housing starts jumped 11.2% in February. Although starts increased across the board, building permits did not paint as strong of a picture. For the second straight month, single-family permits were essentially unchanged, coinciding with weakening builder confidence and increased policy and economic uncertainty. Multifamily permits also decreased in February, though the recent pace is essentially moving sideways, an improvement over the sharp pullback in multifamily construction over the past couple of years. Although mortgage rates have ticked down somewhat in recent weeks, home builder confidence remains subdued alongside dimming growth prospects, elevated inventory levels, tariff concerns and heightened economic uncertainty. Residential construction looks to be challenged by higher construction costs and tighter immigration policies. Indeed, costs associated with building a new home are expected to rise and be passed on to homebuyers. Elevated costs will leave some homebuyers on the sidelines for a while longer despite lower borrowing costs. We forecast a pull back in starts in March to an annualized rate of 1,416K. Our expectations for a weaker labor market would also reduce residential demand, weighing on the pace of residential investment in the coming year. WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing		Market Commentary
CONV	RATE 6.38%	APR 6.86%	Rebounding from an 11.5% adverse weather-driven decline in January, total housing starts jumped 11.2% in February. Although starts increased across the board, building permits did not paint as strong of a picture. For the second straight month, single-family permits were essentially unchanged, coinciding with weakening builder confidence and increased policy and economic uncertainty. Multifamily permits also decreased in February, though the recent pace is essentially moving sideways, an improvement over the sharp pullback in multifamily construction over the past couple of years. Although mortgage rates have ticked down somewhat in recent weeks, home builder confidence remains subdued alongside dimming growth prospects, elevated inventory levels, tariff concerns and heightened economic uncertainty. Residential construction looks to be challenged by higher construction costs and tighter immigration policies. Indeed, costs associated with building a new home are expected to rise and be passed on to homebuyers. Elevated costs will leave some homebuyers on the sidelines for a while longer despite lower borrowing costs. We forecast a pull back in starts in March to an annualized rate of 1,416K. Our expectations for a weaker labor market would also reduce residential demand, weighing on the pace of residential investment in the coming year. 		Rebounding from an 11.5% adverse weather-driven decline in January, total housing starts jumped 11.2% in February. Although starts increased across the board, building permits did not paint as strong of a picture. For the second straight month, single-family permits were essentially unchanged, coinciding with weakening builder confidence and increased policy and economic uncertainty. Multifamily permits also decreased in February, though the recent pace is essentially moving sideways, an improvement over the sharp pullback in multifamily construction over the past couple of years. Although mortgage rates have ticked down somewhat in recent weeks, home builder confidence remains subdued alongside dimming growth prospects, elevated inventory levels, tariff concerns and heightened economic uncertainty. Residential construction looks to be challenged by higher construction costs and tighter immigration policies. Indeed, costs associated with building a new home are expected to rise and be passed on to homebuyers. Elevated costs will leave some homebuyers on the sidelines for a while longer despite lower borrowing costs. We forecast a pull back in starts in March to an annualized rate of 1,416K. Our expectations for a weaker labor market would also reduce residential demand, weighing on the pace of residential investment in the coming year.
