			The housing market had strong momentum to start the year, but that is old news. COVID-19 had made shopping for a new home nearly unthinkable, and mortgage demand has subsequently plunged. However, at least at first construction of new homes was probably less affected than sales-social distancing and other hygienic practices and residential construction are not wholly incompatible, and for the most part construction has been deemed "essential." That said, construction cancellations have mounted because of government-mandated halts, difficulty procuring needed materials, labor shortages or simply preemptive developer caution. Mortgage market dysfunction is another major risk to the single-family market, if payment delays squeeze services and cause credit to contract. Moreover, the millions of layoffs-and the associated loss of income-will destroy purchasing power and hold back single-and multifamily demand for months to come. Source: Wells Fargo Bank. 			The housing market had strong momentum to start the year, but that is old news. COVID-19 had made shopping for a new home nearly unthinkable, and mortgage demand has subsequently plunged. However, at least at first construction of new homes was probably less affected than sales-social distancing and other hygienic practices and residential construction are not wholly incompatible, and for the most part construction has been deemed "essential." That said, construction cancellations have mounted because of government-mandated halts, difficulty procuring needed materials, labor shortages or simply preemptive developer caution. Mortgage market dysfunction is another major risk to the single-family market, if payment delays squeeze services and cause credit to contract. Moreover, the millions of layoffs-and the associated loss of income-will destroy purchasing power and hold back single-and multifamily demand for months to come. Source: Wells Fargo Bank. 			The housing market had strong momentum to start the year, but that is old news. COVID-19 had made shopping for a new home nearly unthinkable, and mortgage demand has subsequently plunged. However, at least at first construction of new homes was probably less affected than sales-social distancing and other hygienic practices and residential construction are not wholly incompatible, and for the most part construction has been deemed "essential." That said, construction cancellations have mounted because of government-mandated halts, difficulty procuring needed materials, labor shortages or simply preemptive developer caution. Mortgage market dysfunction is another major risk to the single-family market, if payment delays squeeze services and cause credit to contract. Moreover, the millions of layoffs-and the associated loss of income-will destroy purchasing power and hold back single-and multifamily demand for months to come. Source: Wells Fargo Bank.
