WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE 2.84%	APR 3.13%	The resiliency of housing lately may seem inconsistent with high unemployment. Job losses have been centered in the hospitality and retail sectors, however, where workers tend to be younger and are more likely to be renters rather than home buyers. The residential effects of the pandemic also appear to be altering the type and location of homes rented and sold. Renters in dense urban markets look to be flocking to the suburbs, where social distancing is easier. The rise of remote work has also made having an extra room and additional usable square footage more important. On top of this, life in the city has probably lost some of its luster, with bars, nightclubs and cultural attractions now closed for the most part. One potential impediment for continued improvement in the housing market, however, is the continued lack of homes available for sale. For-sale inventories rose modestly in June, increasing 1.3% to 1.57-million units, but that still left inventories about 18% lower than their year-ago level. Tight supplies of existing homes for sale may be pushing buyers toward new homes. Sales of new homes surged 13.8% during June to a 776,000-unit pace, the fastest since 2007. Source: Wells Fargo Bank. 			The resiliency of housing lately may seem inconsistent with high unemployment. Job losses have been centered in the hospitality and retail sectors, however, where workers tend to be younger and are more likely to be renters rather than home buyers. The residential effects of the pandemic also appear to be altering the type and location of homes rented and sold. Renters in dense urban markets look to be flocking to the suburbs, where social distancing is easier. The rise of remote work has also made having an extra room and additional usable square footage more important. On top of this, life in the city has probably lost some of its luster, with bars, nightclubs and cultural attractions now closed for the most part. One potential impediment for continued improvement in the housing market, however, is the continued lack of homes available for sale. For-sale inventories rose modestly in June, increasing 1.3% to 1.57-million units, but that still left inventories about 18% lower than their year-ago level. Tight supplies of existing homes for sale may be pushing buyers toward new homes. Sales of new homes surged 13.8% during June to a 776,000-unit pace, the fastest since 2007. Source: Wells Fargo Bank. WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE 2.84%	APR 3.13%
FHA	2.67%	3.32%	The resiliency of housing lately may seem inconsistent with high unemployment. Job losses have been centered in the hospitality and retail sectors, however, where workers tend to be younger and are more likely to be renters rather than home buyers. The residential effects of the pandemic also appear to be altering the type and location of homes rented and sold. Renters in dense urban markets look to be flocking to the suburbs, where social distancing is easier. The rise of remote work has also made having an extra room and additional usable square footage more important. On top of this, life in the city has probably lost some of its luster, with bars, nightclubs and cultural attractions now closed for the most part. One potential impediment for continued improvement in the housing market, however, is the continued lack of homes available for sale. For-sale inventories rose modestly in June, increasing 1.3% to 1.57-million units, but that still left inventories about 18% lower than their year-ago level. Tight supplies of existing homes for sale may be pushing buyers toward new homes. Sales of new homes surged 13.8% during June to a 776,000-unit pace, the fastest since 2007. Source: Wells Fargo Bank.
