WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE 6.75%	APR 6.93%
FHA	6.13%	6.97%	Marking the second consecutive gain, new home sales increased 7.4% in March to a six-month high of 724K annualized units. March's jump looks owed to slightly lower mortgage rates, which temporarily dipped on the month before climbing higher following the "Liberation Day" tariff announcement in early April. New home sales rose 1.6% in the first quarter to a rate of 684K and are up 1.3% compared to the first three months of 2024, suggesting sales are still trending positive. That said, the modest growth seen so far this year is largely attributable to the South region, as sales in every other region are down sharply. Moreover, a drop in the median home price suggests builders are increasingly leaning on price incentives in order to support demand. We look for a 2.6% decline in April new home sales, taking the annualized pace down to 705K. Signs of questionable consumer sentiment in home sales are seen in buyer traffic, which has trended downward recently. Since March, mortgage rates have trended higher, indicating sales are likely to remain under pressure. Moving forward, ongoing economic policy uncertainty, the recent rebound in mortgage rates and subdued economic growth prospects remain formidable headwinds to the new home sales outlook. # WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

	RATE	APR
CONV	6.75%	6.93%
FHA	6.13%	6.97%
10 Yr Yield	4.49%		Marking the second consecutive gain, new home sales increased 7.4% in March to a six-month high of 724K annualized units. March's jump looks owed to slightly lower mortgage rates, which temporarily dipped on the month before climbing higher following the "Liberation Day" tariff announcement in early April. New home sales rose 1.6% in the first quarter to a rate of 684K and are up 1.3% compared to the first three months of 2024, suggesting sales are still trending positive. That said, the modest growth seen so far this year is largely attributable to the South region, as sales in every other region are down sharply. Moreover, a drop in the median home price suggests builders are increasingly leaning on price incentives in order to support demand. We look for a 2.6% decline in April new home sales, taking the annualized pace down to 705K. Signs of questionable consumer sentiment in home sales are seen in buyer traffic, which has trended downward recently. Since March, mortgage rates have trended higher, indicating sales are likely to remain under pressure. Moving forward, ongoing economic policy uncertainty, the recent rebound in mortgage rates and subdued economic growth prospects remain formidable headwinds to the new home sales outlook. ### WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing		Market Commentary
CONV	RATE APR
	6.75% 6.93%
FHA	6.13% 6.97%
10 Yr Yield	4.49%	Marking the second consecutive gain, new home sales increased 7.4% in March to a six-month high of 724K annualized units. March's jump looks owed to slightly lower mortgage rates, which temporarily dipped on the month before climbing higher following the "Liberation Day" tariff announcement in early April. New home sales rose 1.6% in the first quarter to a rate of 684K and are up 1.3% compared to the first three months of 2024, suggesting sales are still trending positive. That said, the modest growth seen so far this year is largely attributable to the South region, as sales in every other region are down sharply. Moreover, a drop in the median home price suggests builders are increasingly leaning on price incentives in order to support demand. We look for a 2.6% decline in April new home sales, taking the annualized pace down to 705K. Signs of questionable consumer sentiment in home sales are seen in buyer traffic, which has trended downward recently. Since March, mortgage rates have trended higher, indicating sales are likely to remain under pressure. Moving forward, ongoing economic policy uncertainty, the recent rebound in mortgage rates and subdued economic growth prospects remain formidable headwinds to the new home sales outlook.
