		"Overall, the inventory build-up suggests that new home buyers are starting to pull back," says Bright MLS Chief Economist Lisa Sturtevant. "Right now, new home inventory is rising because there are fewer buyers and homes that were started last year are sitting vacant." At the current sales pace, the supply of new homes on the market in February would last for 8.9 months, down from 9 months in January but up from 8.7 months a year ago. A supply of six months is generally considered balanced between buyers and sellers, putting current inventory levels for new construction into buyer's territory. "With months of supply remaining in buyers' market ranges for new builds, we continue to see more completed homes for sale than ones that haven't been started yet," says realtor.com Senior Economist Joel Berner. Berner notes that the more leisurely pace of the market allows more buyers to visit their potential new home in its finished state, instead of being forced to purchase a home that is not yet built, as many did during the post-COVID-19 pandemic buying craze of 2021 and 2022. "As mortgage rates remain stubbornly high and existing home prices continue to climb, prospective homebuyers should seriously consider a new build," he says. "The market conditions are more favorable to buyers, builders are prioritizing delivering more affordable new inventory, and the cost of ownership for new homes tends to be lower than existing homes." WEEKLY FINANCIAL NEWS

Financing			Market Commentary
CONV	RATE 6.25%	APR 6.49%
FHA	5.99%	6.76%	"Overall, the inventory build-up suggests that new home buyers are starting to pull back," says Bright MLS Chief Economist Lisa Sturtevant. "Right now, new home inventory is rising because there are fewer buyers and homes that were started last year are sitting vacant." At the current sales pace, the supply of new homes on the market in February would last for 8.9 months, down from 9 months in January but up from 8.7 months a year ago. A supply of six months is generally considered balanced between buyers and sellers, putting current inventory levels for new construction into buyer's territory. "With months of supply remaining in buyers' market ranges for new builds, we continue to see more completed homes for sale than ones that haven't been started yet," says realtor.com Senior Economist Joel Berner. Berner notes that the more leisurely pace of the market allows more buyers to visit their potential new home in its finished state, instead of being forced to purchase a home that is not yet built, as many did during the post-COVID-19 pandemic buying craze of 2021 and 2022. "As mortgage rates remain stubbornly high and existing home prices continue to climb, prospective homebuyers should seriously consider a new build," he says. "The market conditions are more favorable to buyers, builders are prioritizing delivering more affordable new inventory, and the cost of ownership for new homes tends to be lower than existing homes." 		"Overall, the inventory build-up suggests that new home buyers are starting to pull back," says Bright MLS Chief Economist Lisa Sturtevant. "Right now, new home inventory is rising because there are fewer buyers and homes that were started last year are sitting vacant." At the current sales pace, the supply of new homes on the market in February would last for 8.9 months, down from 9 months in January but up from 8.7 months a year ago. A supply of six months is generally considered balanced between buyers and sellers, putting current inventory levels for new construction into buyer's territory. "With months of supply remaining in buyers' market ranges for new builds, we continue to see more completed homes for sale than ones that haven't been started yet," says realtor.com Senior Economist Joel Berner. Berner notes that the more leisurely pace of the market allows more buyers to visit their potential new home in its finished state, instead of being forced to purchase a home that is not yet built, as many did during the post-COVID-19 pandemic buying craze of 2021 and 2022. "As mortgage rates remain stubbornly high and existing home prices continue to climb, prospective homebuyers should seriously consider a new build," he says. "The market conditions are more favorable to buyers, builders are prioritizing delivering more affordable new inventory, and the cost of ownership for new homes tends to be lower than existing homes."
